How Can ICC Arrest Warrants be Enforced against Heads of State?: The International Criminal Court at the Crossroads of Law and Politics

Open to all!

9 July (Tue.)

- 3:00 pm-4:30 pm
- Large Conference Room, IDEC building

Abstract

Prosecutions of high-ranking government officials and heads of state by the International Criminal Court are no longer uncommon. Article 27, the irrelevance of the official capacity of the Rome Statute, has become a symbolic provision of the International Criminal Court. In reality, however, no ICC arrest warrants have ever been executed against sitting heads of state, and they remain at large. This presentation, therefore, does not limit itself to a legal discussion but instead presents how difficult it is to arrest sitting heads of state from a political dynamic perspective and what approaches should be sought in these complexities.

A lecture by Hiroshige Fujii (Dr.)

Dr. Hiroshige Fujii is an Associate Professor at Utsunomiya University. He has seven years of professional work experience, two of which were spent in the Cabinet Office in UN Peacekeeping Operations. He analyzes the logic of both sides, those who decide to judicial intervention and those targeted by International Justice, by conducting fieldwork to elucidate how post-conflict society has been transformed. His academic papers have been selected for two prestigious academic awards for young researchers in Japan (2021 & 2022), See his academic/educational achievements on his website (https://www.fujiih.com/).
